

Michael J. Flatters

Michael is a partner at Burnet, Duckworth & Palmer ("BD&P"), where he practices in the Tax group, with particular emphasis on the income tax and excise aspects of domestic and international corporate reorganizations, financings and commercial transactions. He also advises on corporate compensation plans, the registration and operation of registered pension plans and charities and on trust and litigation matters. Michael's practice includes the area of Aboriginal Law, where he has extensive experience in tax planning associated with the negotiation and implementation of comprehensive land claim agreements, impacts and benefits agreements and commercial business ventures involving aboriginal participants. He has participated in the negotiation and drafting of the taxation and finance chapters of significant aboriginal land claims agreements with the Government of Canada.

Michael has been named a leading tax lawyer in Canada in Best Lawyers in Canada, 2013-2015 and is a frequent presenter at the Canadian Tax Foundation conferences. He is a former editor of the Taxation and Financing of Aboriginal Businesses in Canada.
